

Inhaling the Silence

Anna Yin

A new collection of poems by an exceptionally talented and new poetic voice.

Anna Yin broke on to the literary landscape of Canada and beyond with her first book of poems Wings Toward Sunlight, (Mosaic Press, 2011). Many of her poems have since been translated into Chinese and her work has received very wide critical praise.

Inhaling the Silence is her new book in which her poetic voice has matured, developed and has been extended thematically.

Here is what critics have said about her work:

“It is a beautiful book, crafted by a beautiful poet. You have a great tell-tale line. It is ‘You outlive.’ Beautiful, beautiful.”

John Robert Colombo

“Wings toward Sunlight, in a delicate and sensitive manner, threads the more mature approach of western romantic poetry and the finest touches of eastern nature poetry...each poem is an exquisite journey...”

Ron Dart, Clarion Journal

“You have an affinity with the Imagists...The poems are certainly heartfelt and mysterious (in a good way!). You have a knack of saying things simply and evocatively.”

Professor Richard Greene, University of Toronto

“Anna Yin is a fine writer with a true feel for the power of nature and the healing strength of wilderness.”

Roy MacGregor

“Beautiful verses and powerful images touched many readers.”

Alan Neal, host, CBC Radio

“An authentic, direct tone brings the author’s native Chinese voice to these poems, which are charming and fresh at their best.”

Elena Wolff, Poet and editor

Anna Yin was born in China and has lived with her family in Mississauga, Ontario for many years. She is a frequent contributor to the literary magazines of Canada, the US and china. She has been interviewed numerous times on CBC, China Daily and other media. Her many prizes include the Ted Plantos Award, the IBPC First Place, the MARTY Award and more.
